Lionel J. Lyttlewhakker: Last Will and Testament

I am Lionel J. Lyttlewhakker, and this is my last will and testament. My wife passed, and my lovely granddaughter was cruelly taken from us many years ago, leaving me with one lone family member remaining - my son. To my son, whom I have not seen in several years, I leave this spoon.

If only my son had not lost his only child all those years ago, I would have a loving relative to whom I could leave my estate. Alas, with no family to speak of, the remainder of my estate shall be split evenly among those I have grown closest to in my waning years - my staff. My nurse, Roy, my cook, Millie, my Accountant, Geraldine, my gardener, Botan, and my housekeeper, Francoise.

However, one of my staff has not been as loyal as I thought. Recently, one of my prized possessions went missing, so I fear that one of those I have grown closest to has been stealing from me.

With my dying breath, I shall uncover the thief, to whom I bequeath a long prison sentence, while those who have been loyal shall enjoy the spoils of my sizable estate.
