

Girl, 7, missing since April

May 21, 2009

By Jennifer Baskerville

Haley Lyttlewhakker, age 4, went missing from a play yard less than 3 blocks from her family home, 21 days ago, and as of yet, police have no suspects. Her father, Herbert Lyttlewhakker, was nearby getting hot dogs from a street vendor, and when he turned back to give one to his daughter, she was nowhere to be found.

Witnesses at the scene reportedly noticed no commotion, and no one heard any cries for help. Police suspect that the girl may have wandered into the nearby woods.

Search parties scoured the woods until late in evening, and continued their search for the next four days, before concluding that she was no longer in the immediate vicinity.

If the girl had wandered far enough, it is possible she got trapped in one of the bogs that are common in the area, and of drowned, though police are holding out hope that she is still alive and well.

HALEY LYTTLEWHAKKER

Police have not given up on their efforts to locate the missing girl and are requesting that anyone with any information relating to the case come forward.

Haley's grandfather, Lionel, controversial collector of rare archaeological artifacts, has posted a reward of $50,000 to anyone who provides information leading to the location of the young girl.

Sudanese government seeks repatriation of "plundered" artifacts

May 21, 2009

By Rami Deng

A spokesman for the government of Sudan made a formal request to believed to be almost 3,500 years old.